Gailynn Gluth is the Founder and CEO of Wynsum Arts, a social entrepreneurship organization that helps parents of children with special needs and learning challenges find the most relevant, effective, and affordable mobile technologies and online solutions available to help their children become independent learners. Founded in 2007, Wynsum Arts’ mission is to positively improve outcomes for parents and children of special needs. This mission is accomplished by creating an affordable technology transfer model for education and social science research.

As a mother of a son with Asperger's Syndrome, Gailynn spent countless hours searching for effective, research-driven tools to help her son; sorting through hundreds of books and websites while navigating through a maze of paperwork for schools, therapists and programs. She realized that there was an enormous need to simplify, organize, and streamline these tools and that's when the idea for Wynsum Arts was born.

Rather than starting a non-profit, or waiting for the divergent segments of education, research, technology, and professional clinicians to work together to develop solutions, Gailynn followed a unique approach to help her son and millions of others just like him. She saw that, like so many kids, her son craved the cool whiz-bang of technology. With that in mind, she focused on bringing affordable solutions – the ones that kids like her son embrace – to the market.

Gailynn started Wynsum Arts after a successful career as a director at Starbucks Coffee Company. She is a skilled consultant and executive-level project manager with extensive experience in taking concepts to global implementation. Through Georgia State University, Gailynn is a 2011 LEND Fellow through the AUCD (Association of University Centers on Disabilities) in partnership with the CDC National Center on Birth Defects and Developmental Disabilities, NIH, and MCHB. She is actively involved in the special needs, developmental disabilities, and autism communities.
